

Criteria F: Product evaluation and future product development

The thumbnails are to be clickable and linked to full size image files which then display in the browser

This requirement has been met exactly as described. When clicking on the thumbnails the image, the browser takes you to a new page that contains only the image on its full size. I considered it important for the images to all have a link to view them fully, but I didn't want them to all be available because it would make the website run slower, so by adding links to the images the visitors can view in full size only those they want to.

To have a website with easy navigation throughout

It's critical for the website to be easy to navigate around through, as we want those who visit to enjoy the pictures and get to know Luis, therefore I've ensured it's easy to navigate around by testing it on friends.

Ensure that the website functions correctly in a range of browsers

You never know which browser someone will use to view the website, so it needs to be available in a range of browsers. For know I know it works on Mozilla Firefox, Safari and Internet Explorer.

Consistent page layout with organizational colours and images

This was met because it makes it easier for who ever is viewing the page to navigate around if all the pages have the same layout, because this way they will know where everything is and won't have to look around.

Possible future developments

There are some developments that could be improved for the future. I would like to have a button at the bottom of the page where the person viewing the images can print the images that they are viewing. I would also like to consider having all the images with a watermark, and creating a log in account for users for which they would have to pay, and they would be the only ones permitted to view the images without the watermark. As my client said, something that could be improved is the size of the thumbnails. But when it comes to removing something from the website, when asking Luis said to delete "nothing".
